TEXT

The plot is situated in the village of 'Vork' on the hilly slope of the Vejle river valley. The project required an equestrian farm with associated farm and residential buildings. The different volumes and functions of the program is connected as one compact unit with operating buildings of different shapes and sizes within a single structure. The stables with their low elevation shed buildings is located towards east and closest to the village. To the west is the riding hall. The international standard riding hall is the greatest volume and is located in the vast open landscape. The center is created by withdrawing the area from the edge of the valley slope and placing it within the more stable landscape of the plain. The center is intended as a comprehensive and compact structure which adapts to the area's scale and urban relations. This based on an idea to take up the least possible area of land and thereby creating green park like space around itself.
